Postnatal development of the area centralis of the kitten

The postnatal development of the area centralis of the kitten retina was followed with the electron microscope. After birth, small but well developed photoreceptor outer segments were observed. Cone pedicles formed triads and bipolar cells formed dyads; so, potentially, cone pathways to the ganglion cell were present at this time. By the start of the second week, rod spherules formed shallow invaginations containing both central and lateral processes and rod bipolar cells formed dyads. Thus
