US20100158045A1 Method for transmitting receiving data

Provided is a method for transmitting/receiving data in a CAN protocol. First, it is determined whether the size of CAN message data to be transmitted exceeds the size of the data field. If the size of the CAN message data exceeds the size of the data field, the CAN message data are fragmented to generate data fragments smaller in size than the

US4989243A Automatic compensation system of transmission

The gain control data increases or decreases according to the receiving information data provided to the microprocessor, if the level of the receiving signal to the MODEM is too high or too low, thereby controlling its transmitting gain with an optimum level according to the receiving level.

Automatic compensation system of transmission level in

Accordingly, the gain variation according to the condition of transmission line can be detected and therefrom the transmitting level is automatically controlled in response to the detection, thereby having the communication executed with the signal having the optimum gain level irrespectively of the variation of the transmission line condition.
